STEAMER "PLYMOUTH ROCK."
THIS vessel was built in New York, during the years 1880-83, for service upon the Rivers of China. She has never made a voyage, or a passage, upon the rivers or Coast of the United States, and the only voyage she has ever made is that from New York to Hongkong, and she is nearly ready to take the place of the "Hankow," on the line between Hongkong, and

The main drift of the piece is the effect of the tender passion on the mind of a barbarian. The scene is laid at Symcouse, fagomars is the Chief of a tribe of mountaineers, who lived as did the Scotch Highlanders when the kilt was the badge of a thief—that is to say, by pillaging their more civilised and wealthy neighbours. His tribe had made captives and old man, the father of Partheus (the heroism of the piece). His friends being unable to ransom him, Partheus went to the hunt of the mountaineers, and gave herself up as a hostage for the ransom of her father. She met the Chief, Ingomar, a splendid fellow, as brave as a lion, and as honest as daylight. He could understand a man loving his comrades, or his blood, or his home; but, as for the tender mission of a man towards a woman, it was incomprehensible. Women, in his eyes were mere drudges and slaves. However, he soon became enamoured with Pearl, and on attempting to gratify his passion by violence, she drew a dagger and threatened to destroy herself, unless he desisted. His admiration of her increased, his passion, and finally he left his comrades, took her home and married her.

mission is evidently great under such circumstances. The spillover of love outlasting the ravages—his attempts to resist it—his refusal at abandoning his wild life—afford excellent opportunities for the development of fine acting. Then the tableaux which are presented by the quarrels and revolts of his followers—the situations in which he is placed in connection with some of the incongruities and inconsistencies of civilized life—his indignation and desire to get the worst of

Mr. C. F. Thorne was absolutely great. Tommy—his leit ensemble, his attitudes, his voice and gestures give him a natural aptitude for the part, which a close study of his character enabled him to portray beautifully. Miss Mabel the Adulteress, performed Patricia in a very convincing manner. Master Marsh acted part of a miser with great success. The subordinate parts were all well done, and I have no hesitation in stating that nothing was compared with the representation on review was ever seen in this colony before.

It will be seen that another five act play has been performed at the Queen's to-night.
